ABSTRACT

Introduction	Adolescence is a time when tensions escalate, especially because of social pressure and under face of new conditions. Therefore, the majority of teenagers had emotional instability from time to time as a counseling frequency of adjustment efforts on new behavior patterns and new social expectations. Emotional development of adolescent autonomy is inseparable from the application of parenting parents through interactions between mothers and fathers with teenage because parents are the first environment which had the greatest role in parenting their teenagers, so it has the greatest influence on the formation of adolescent emotional autonomy.
Objective	To determine the relationship between parent and parenting teenager's emotional maturity based on the perception of class X and XI adolescents in Senior High School 6 Palembang in 2010.
Methods	This used analytical survey with cross sectional approach where the total population are 502 students of class X and XI Senior High School 6 Palembang. Sampling was conducted from May to June 2010 by using random sampling method, with the number of 83 respondents. The bivariate data analysis was done by Chi-Square test.
Results	Based on bivariate analysis, there is no significant correlation between parenting parents with adolescent emotional maturity (p value = 0.666). The school and teachers hope to provide the patterns and guidance to adolescents. The teenagers hope to be more open to all the information and are advised to get used to add knowledge to know the ways to learn, the methods to understand themselves and others so that they can express emotional reactions, under the terms and conditions that exist so that interaction with others can be established effectively.
